In order to ensure that FIFA 22's new features are as authentic as possible, the developers have paid close attention to the accuracy and movement of the models in the game. In addition to analyzing data from player movements collected during the FIFA Ultimate Team offline cups, the developers have also been researching real-life player characteristics and playing styles. As a result, the developers' knowledge of player and ball movements and behaviour in-game has been improved. Data from FUT offline cups and gameplay analysis and testing "The FUT offline cups and the use of motion capture systems have allowed us to collect information that has further enhanced the characteristics of our players," said FIFA Senior Producer Kevin Knocke. "We have put a lot of effort into our FUT teams, and offline cups have helped us refine those teams to make sure that they mirror the real-life teams. The same goes for our players, and the motion capture system has helped us get a better understanding of their movements and behaviour. The information that we have collected has informed all of the gameplay, and we can ensure that the in-game movement of our players looks and feels more authentic." The most important aspect of FIFA 22 for the developers was making the jump from FIFA 1 to FIFA 21. "The team has worked very hard to improve the level of movement and animations of our players," said FIFA Lead Animator Gary Chan. "With the 'Power Pressure' button, we have put our players into the most challenging situations, and we have worked closely with the development team to get the animations to feel as natural as possible." Evolution of a player - an example of the work done on player models "In FIFA 1, we didn't have any ways of simulating player movement," said Lead Visual Effects Lead Erik Hultén. "Now that we have had the opportunity to work with motion capture data, we have been able to refine the players' movements and get a better understanding of how they act and move in the real world. The work done on our players has made the match feel more authentic." Collecting data from players' movements in different real-life situations As a result of the rich data collected from these offline cups, the developers have been able to create a system that works in even more situations. "We have
