What Is Photoshop? Photoshop is a raster graphics editor or vector image editor. It has a powerful design concept: Use layers and use multiple layers. Like a picture is made up of layers, you can build up images by adding, deleting, or moving layers. You can add multiple layers together to build up the photo. Layers are like an overlay, or a transparency. You can have a layer with colors, another with text, a third with a pattern, etc. With layers, you can overlap and blend them together. You can either work in image mode or canvas mode. You can work with the RAW image or you can work with the Photoshop RGB image with the actual RGB components. You can work with the displayed or work with the visible pixels. You can work with the pixels that are non-destructive (tried and true method), or you can work in destructive mode, where the pixels are changed but the layer is still intact. There are three versions of Photoshop. The current version is Photoshop CS6, but the Photoshop CS5 and earlier versions (CS4 and earlier) are still available for download, some by Adobe and some by other developers. What Is Photoshop Used For? Photoshop is used for simple but powerful editing tasks: - Resize photos - Cropping photos - Adjusting photo lighting, exposure, and contrast - Creating special effects - Photo retouching - Creating new images with type and text - Adding special design and special effects - Making adjustments to images for various purposes - Mapping and creating Photoshop effects - Enhancing colors with HDR software - Collage techniques Is Photoshop Free? The major versions (CS6) of Photoshop are free to download and own. There are also older versions of Photoshop available for free download from the Adobe website. Users who use a trial or student version of Photoshop can upgrade to a new, full version of the program for free. Can You Find Free Stuff When you Shop Online? By Appian Freebies and giveaways are still a very real part of shopping online. More and more sites are offering free stuff, just a few minutes of your time, a way to get your name on a website. There are many websites and apps that will offer you different kinds of free stuff. Sometimes, you need to have a specific app, such as amazon's app. Occasionally, you won't even need an app, just some time. Most of the time, freebies are a result of bad marketing that think only of the need for attention; but there are sites like Appian, that are genuinely looking for a win-win scenario. Freebies are a great way to engage and get a potential customer; the problem is, the problem is not just that the customer will get a freebie, but will come back and do business with you. So, when thinking about getting freebies or giveaways, ask yourself the following questions: Do you see yourself as someone who gives back? Do you want free stuff? How will this benefit you? Will you use it? Many freebies are a way to offer a prize, and to get a lot of attention. They can be used to get people to be more attentive to your listing, and to get people to click on your listing. Usually, they are targeted to groups, and social media. If a person has a Facebook page, they are more likely to be in a high power group. If someone is on Facebook, there is a high chance that they have some type of social media power. This is actually getting more and more common, as more people are using social media. And when people use social media, they have that presence. Don't forget, once you get a freebie, it is still free. Use it as much as you can, but make sure that you don't spend more time on it than your listing. You can even have a way of keeping track of what was used. As a social media person, they value your time, and your valuable as a brand. So, use your freebie, but don't use it to the point where your listing is under stress. This invention relates to measurement of RF power and/or to RF signal and power ratios for the purpose of controlling, in Caffeine-induced behavioral responses in human subjects. Excessive consumption of caffeinated beverages can be a major public health concern, yet the specific behavioral effects of these substances are poorly understood. The purpose of the current study was to begin characterizing the behavioral effects of caffeine in humans. Six healthy men participated in a placebo and caffeine double-blind, across-day study of behavioral responses. Caffeine consumption resulted in significant changes in the frequency of use of behaviors considered relevant to caffeine. Caffeine produced the greatest effect on the use of caffeine-containing beverages, while the frequency of use of foods, medications, and caffeinated foods was not affected by caffeine. The use of caffeine-containing beverages showed a marked increase following caffeine consumption, while the use of caffeinated foods showed a marked decrease. The results suggest that caffeine has broad effects on human behavior. Close Save changes " Text="Logout" />
