The download manager will start your download, and will keep your downloads in a queue. You can deactivate it at any time in the settings. An error occurred during the installation. This probably means that the installation package is corrupt or could not be located. Contact the software vendor, except in cases of malware. In the case of download and other software problems, you can get help and support in the following ways:

Q: jQuery filtering divs with index and class I have a list of divs each with an index and a class.

`$('#div[class=minimal]').click(function() { //stuff }); $('#div[class=minimal]').first().click(function() { //stuff });` This returns the first div that has the class "minimal", so I want the second one to be returned. Is there an easy way to this? A: The `[class=minimal]` selector selects all divs with the "minimal" class, and then returns the first one found, so you don't need to do anything special. A:

You can use `.filter` to filter all divs that have the required class `$('#div.minimal').click(function() { //stuff }); $('#div.minimal').first().click(function() { //stuff });` A: Try this:

`$("#div.minimal").first().trigger('click');` No need to use any other selector if you just want to get the first element with the required class and then trigger a click event. They say that great photography cannot exist without a great subject, but in the case of Patrick McMinn, a Southern photographer based out of Asheville, the notion of "great subject" can imply an entirely different connotation. McMinn's subjects include his native North Carolina, a circus, his hobby as a popular photographer, and most notably, his own family. Between these and the work that he has shared in his blog, McMinn's photography is a portrait of the human experience, where the lens represents more than just a simple medium of expression. In a recent blog post, McMinn wrote about an interesting observation he came across when viewing a photo of a young boy walking to school—an observation that surprisingly, held more weight than the
